

Pilgrim of Peace Here on Long Hike

A Peace Pilgrim, who would give no other name than that, is in Wilmington today on the last lap of her coast-to-coast walk in behalf of peace.

An easterner whose forwarding address is Cologne, N. J., she is a gray-flecked blonde, with blue eyes and a cheerful voice, who at least seems to be getting her message across.

She started from Los Angeles, she said, without a cent, and has been walking an average of 25 miles a day. No one has refused her food and shelter because she has "never asked for anything." Her longest period without food was 36 hours, she said, and she has slept on the concrete floor of bus stations and in one $15-a-night suite in Arizona.

The only luggage the slack-garbed woman had when she stopped in the News-Journal news room was a brown paper bag holding "unanswered mail from people who have been interested in furthering world peace and have written to me."
